BEACONS FOR NIGHT FLIERS

As an aid to aviation and the development of night flying, the Standard Oil Company of California is building what will be the two highest powered incandescent electric beacons in the country—one to be placed on the summit of Mt. Diablo near San Francisco bay and the other in the Merced Hills, Los Angeles. These beacons will develop ten million candlepower and the flashing beams from them will be visible to aviators for between 100 and 150 miles. The company has taken this action at the suggestion of the United States Department of Commerce, the Airways Division of which is now engaged in installing lights to mark the airways from Los Angeles to San Francisco and from Los Angeles to Salt Lake City. The Department of Commerce is also projecting a series of lights northward and eastward from San Francisco, as indicated in the chart above. These official airway lights are set at frequent intervals and each of three million candlepower each.

The government will give the light on Mt. Diablo the official designation of "SD," standing for "Standard-Diablo," and "SL," signifying "Standard-Los Angeles," for the light in the Merced Hills. The light for this type of beacon, built by the Sperry Gyroscope Co., is furnished by large 1500-watt incandescent lamps especially manufactured for the purpose. The reflector and lens of the beacon are 36 inches in diameter. The light is equipped with an ingenious device holding two of the incandescent lamps—one directly in front of the focal point of the reflector. In the event of this lamp burning out the second lamp is automatically thrown over to take the place of the one that has gone out. This is done almost instantly so that there is no interruption in the operation of the beacon. The beacon itself makes six complete revolutions per minute. An automatic astronomical clock turns the beacon on at sunset and off at sunrise. This clock automatically compensates for the constantly changing hours of sunset and sunrise. The beacons will be mounted on 75-foot steel towers. The symbols SD and SL will be hung on the side of the towers as a mark of identification in letters twelve feet high outlined in neon lights. These lights complement the existing system of daylight airway signs which the Standard Oil Company maintains at some 500 points on the Pacific Coast. These signs are painted on the roofs of its warehouses and give the name of the town in which located. They can be read by aviators at a height of several thousand feet.
